Globally, the industry faces the impacts of climate change and oil prices on worldwide travel patterns, exchange rate fluctuations, global economic growth and aviation capacity amongst other factors. At a local level, challenges include the availability of appropriately qualified and skilled staff, increasing competition amongst New Zealand regions and Australian destinations, environmental management, accommodation capacity, domestic air capacity, transport links and local infrastructure demands.

Regular APR services include Visitor Attraction Monitors and Visiting Friend and Relations (VFR) surveys for a range of areas throughout New Zealand.

Visitor Attraction Monitors provide useful insights into the size, composition and characteristics of visitors to a tourist attraction market at both the regional level, when monitoring groups of attractions, and at the individual attraction level. VFR surveys complement the Tourism Research Commercial Accommodation Monitor by monitoring visitors to a region or district that stay overnight in private accommodation.

On a project basis, APR's wide portfolio of tourism projects includes:

- economic impact studies for regional events centres, airports and other tourism-related projects;
- demand analysis for accommodation, conference centre and entertainment providers, aviation services, and tourism attraction operators;
- regional tourism profiling and strategy formulation; and
- market assessments, feasibility studies and business plans for proposed tourism ventures, resorts and hotels.

APR Consultants offers public and private organisations a host of research, analytical and planning services specific to the tourism sector and customised to individual needs.
